

If we examine the words that Martin Luther King emphasized through anaphora, and ask which words he used most frequently, we find that by far the most frequent were the most positive words: “I have a dream,” and “Let freedom ring.” Even in the darkest years of segregation, Dr. King believed that the nation could one day become a free democracy for all of its people.