Notes to Students

_Practice for Literature_ is not a test book. It is a book for practice, unification, and exploration, intended to extend the work begun in _The Grammar of Literature, The Vocabulary of Literature_, and _The Poetry of Literature_. On each page you will find a sentence from a famous literary work, challenging you to analyze the grammar, to comment on special features of the grammar, to grasp the use of an important vocabulary word and its Latin or Greek origin, to spot the often camouflaged music of vowels and consonants that the author used, and to determine what the sentence demonstrates about how to write.

Both the author and the book title at the top of each page are researchable.

Many of these sentences present serious challenges. In my own analysis of the sentences, I made frequent use of a dictionary to see what the options were for parts of speech, and I sometimes had to research and reflect on particularly challenging details of grammar. Accordingly, I expect that much of the work you will do with this text, whether as homework, group work, or in-class discussion, will involve looking things up and thinking deeply about them.

Furthermore, in a world of so-called right answers, these sentences demonstrate that the English language is immense, human, and to some extent _terra incognita_. Not every island of the language has been mapped, and there are parts yet unnamed. Sometimes your conclusions, both as individuals and as a class, might be original and creative. The teacher manual will show the solutions that I developed.

Practice: This book presents a collection of four-level analysis sentences for year-long practice and improvement in a sequence of graduated difficulty that will let you begin with the basics and work up through increasing complexity.
Unification in the Writing Process: One of the purposes of this practice book is to overcome the damaging misconception that the different aspects of language arts are separate and disconnected. You may think of grammar as a useless tedium, or that vocabulary and grammar have nothing to do with one another, or that poetic technique is of interest only to poets, or that none of these are relevant to writing. These pages will give you a permanent vision of how the writing process combines grammar, vocabulary, and poetics into a single coherent system of communication. To write, you need everything.

In each sentence you will see all four levels of grammar, you will see the words from The Vocabulary of Literature, and you will see elements of poetics that you have encountered in The Poetry of Literature or another of my poetry texts. It all comes together on each page, just as it does in the actual process of writing.

Flexibility: 4Practice for Literature has been prepared with the goals of maximum simplicity and flexibility in mind. It is organized in the most straightforward and uncomplicated form possible: one hundred sentences of four-level analysis, generally beginning with the least difficult sentences, and roughly grouped into four chapters of twenty-five sentences each for the four levels of grammar. The first twenty-five sentences (Chapter One) feature parts of speech, the second chapter features the parts of sentence, the third the phrases, and the fourth the clauses. All four chapters, however, analyze all four levels. There is no expectation that every sentence in the book be done or that they be done in the precise order that they appear. Rather, this is a collection you can draw from freely and creatively to enhance and continue the learning initiated in The Grammar of Literature and The Vocabulary of Literature.

Written Assignments: For written assignments done as in-class activities or as written homework, there are a few ideas that make the process clear and straightforward. On each page of this book, you will see a sentence with four blank lines below it. These lines represent the four levels of traditional grammar: the parts of speech, the parts of sentence, phrases, and clauses. Each level is important in your ability to write correctly.
For example, if the sentence were “I continued with unabated fervour to traverse immense deserts,” you would write the abbreviations of the parts of speech directly below each word in the first line, the parts of sentence in the second, phrases in the third, and clauses in the fourth. For phrases and clauses, you would make little lines to show where the phrase or clause begins and ends. Each answer should be written straight down from its target.

a simple declarative sentence

Grammar: This sentence contains a beautiful infinitive phrase, to traverse immense deserts, acting as the direct object. The infinitive to traverse is considered to be one word, and deserts is the object of the infinitive. The prepositional phrase acts as an adverb to modify the verb.

Vocabulary: Mary Shelley used the British spelling of fervor. A fervor is a passion (VL2). The adjective unabated means not reduced, not lessened (VL5).

Poetics: Beyond its solid rhythm, the sentence does not contain obvious poetics such as alliteration or assonance.

Writing: The sentence demonstrates Mary Shelley’s usual vocabulary power; she was an intellect, married to an intellect (Percy Bysshe Shelley), and the daughter of intellects Mary Wollstonecraft and William Godwin. A powerful vocabulary allows us to say more with fewer syllables, thus increasing the strength of the sentence.
