Notes to Students

Grammar is a way of thinking about language, and when we think like this, we look at our sentences in four different ways. We look at each word to see what kind of word it is, we look at the two sides of the idea in the sentence, we look for little word groups called phrases, and we look to see if the sentence has one clause or more than one clause.

This book will give you practice thinking this way. The method for doing this is called four-level analysis, after the four levels just mentioned. Their names are parts of speech (the eight kinds of words), parts of the sentence, phrases, and clauses.

On each page there is a sentence with four lines below it. Study the sentence, and then write the abbreviations for the parts of speech below each word in the first line, the parts of sentence in the second, phrases in the third, and clauses in the fourth. For phrases and clauses, make little lines to show where the phrase or clause begins and ends. Notice that every word is a part of speech, but only some words are a part of sentence. At the bottom of the page, there is a place to write a comment about anything you think is interesting or fun about the sentence.

The abbreviations used here are:

Parts of Speech
